The RealReal Helps Prevent Trafficking of Stolen Goods

March 12, 2020

Teams with LeadsOnline to give law enforcement agencies nationwide visibility into its full inventory

SAN FRANCISCO, March 12, 2020 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Today, The RealReal (Nasdaq: REAL)—the world's largest online marketplace for authenticated, consigned luxury goods—announced it has engaged with LeadsOnline, the nation's largest online investigation service, to help law enforcement catch criminals who traffic in stolen luxury goods.

The RealReal has a long history of working with local, and where appropriate federal, law enforcement to assist in stolen property investigations. Today it is expanding those efforts to a national level to help prevent the trafficking and sale of stolen luxury goods.

Through the LeadsOnline platform, law enforcement officers now have visibility into The RealReal's current inventory. Details including product descriptions, serial numbers, imagery, and the date and location of the consignment will all be accessible to verified law enforcement officers. Officers will also have a direct line of communication with The RealReal so the company can further assist with active investigations.

"Working with LeadsOnline to create national transparency around our inventory expands our ability to support law enforcement efforts to stop criminal traffickers of luxury goods," said Rati Levesque, COO of The RealReal.
